PREFATORY NOTE.

The Catalogue now issued has been prepared under circumstances quite unfavorable to thoroughness and accuracy. By necessity the greater part of the labor of transcribing and arranging titles has been performed by assistants who had had no previous experience in this kind of work. And during the whole progress of the work the free circulation and use of the books has not been obstructed for a day. The librarian, under the direction of the Committee of Revision, has supervised the work in all its course and in all its details. The labor of finally revising the manuscript for the press, involving very frequent reference to original title pages and to other authorities for the settling of doubtful points, and the whole of the proof-reading, has been performed by him. But with all the care possible in the case, errors and mistakes must have occurred.

This volume is rather an index to the library, than a catalogue. It has been prepared as a help in finding the books, and in ascertaining what books the library contains on particular subjects. Every book has been entered and may be found under the name of the author when known, or if anonymous, under the leading word of the title. These entries have been made sufficiently full to identify the books and to give a tolerably clear idea of their purpose and scope, including the place and date of publication, the number and size of volumes, and frequently the edition. Where no mention is made of the size of the volume in this principal entry, it is understood to be of duodecimo or smaller size. As an additional aid to the finding of books, very many of them have been entered under their title or under some characteristic or significant word in the title.

A third and sometimes a fourth entry has been made under the word or words which most clearly indicate the subject of the books.

These title and subject entries have been made very short, so as to gain space and bring a large number under the eye at once. They are constructed so as to enable one to find at once the principal entry, where the full description of the book is given.

These entries have all been arranged in one list and in strict alphabetical order. The arrangement of authors and subjects in separate alphabets, which was followed in previous catalogues, has some advantages. But the present plan has been found to be far more convenient and useful.

Great pains have been taken to make such subject entries as would exhibit the general contents of all the books, and to arrange these entries so as to render it easy to find what the library contains on any given topic. It has been the aim to make particular rather than general subject entries; and when the number of works on any subject is large they have been classified. (See Architecture, England.) To avoid the repetition of entries very copious references have been made to other entries and titles.

Special attention is called to the list of dramas on pages 157–68. This feature of the catalogue is believed to be entirely unique. And when it is considered that none of the collections of plays contain a general index, and the most of them not even a table of contents, its utility will be readily seen.

While this Catalogue has been going through the press, a large number of books has been added to the library and much new information obtained as to others. When possible this new matter has been inserted in its proper place in the body of the work; but much of it has of necessity been put at the end of the volume in the form of a supplement. The Catalogue thus contains the title of every book in the Library at the beginning of the present year.

Dramas, arranged alphabetically by titles.

[Note.—For Greek and Latin classics in the original, see the names of their authors in the body of the catalogue. Translations are entered here under the titles given by the translators. Attention is requested to the exceptional arrangement of the directing numbers in this article. A number standing before a comma, points out a volume; a number standing before a semicolon or period, points out a book; and, if the latter number be less than 500, the book is in class 24; if greater, in class 34—foreign languages—unless otherwise marked. Abbreviations: C, for comedy; Cb, comédie-ballet; Cd, comédie-drame, or comic drama; Ct, comedietta; Cv, comédie-vaudeville; F, farce; L, lustspiel; Md, melodrama; N, nachspiel; O, opera; Oc, opera-comique; P, posse; S, schauspiel; Trag, tragedy; Trag.-lyr., tragédie-lyrique; Tr, trauerspiel; Va, vaudeville; Vo, vorspiel.]
